SPECIAL MATERIAL BEING PREPARED FOR CENTENNIAL YEARS

Washington, D. C.- Special maps showing battle sites and other points of interest connected with the Civil War are planned as a part of the sesquicentennial observances scheduled to start in 1961, Karl S. Betts, executive director of the National Civil War Centennial Commission, announced here today.

These maps, he said, will be prepared in cooperation with the National Commission by professional map-making concerns, oil companies, automobile associations, magazines, and other interests. Some of these already are on the drawing board, he added, and will be available in ample time to be of service to the millions of persons expected to visit Civil War sites during the four-year Centennial program.

The American Automobile Association, for example, is considering the publication next year of a special map showing 100 Civil War battle sites, historic buildings, and monuments, as well as major highway routes leading to them. Bruce Catton, distinguished historian and author, will write narrative copy to accompany the map. It will be distributed to members of affiliated motor clubs.

In April, 1961, cartographers of the National Geographic Society plan to release to its 2,500,000 members a 10-color map of the Civil War area. This will be printed on both sides, one side showing the general war area and the other an enlargement of the area from Harrisburg, Pa., to Norfolk, Va. Both sides will have appropriate descriptive notes.

The National Geographic map originally will be 19 x 25 inches in dimension, but later may be enlarged to 32½ by 42 inches. The Atlas-size will be available to non-members at 50 cents per copy. Wall-sized copies in paper will be priced at $1 each and in fabric at $2 each.

Oil companies, Mr. Betts reported, are planning a series of both regional and state maps. These will be illustrated with battle locations and photograps or historic shrines connected with the war. They will be designed especially to add the motoring tourist in finding his way over the network of modern highways to the sites that featured in America's great war of a century ago.

Author of 'Wine of The Morning'

The old saying that the busy man is always able to take on something extra certainly proves true in the case of Dr. Bob Jones, Jr., the author of "Wine of Morning," the first-century Christian film to be shown at Appomattox High School on Wednesday, Aug. 12, at 7:30 P. M., sponsored by the Bible Baptist Church.

Dr. Jones is president of Bob Jones University, an institution with an enrollment of approximately 3,000 students. He had for a long time planned to write a novel dealing with Barabbas, the murderer and thief upon whose cross Christ died; but because of his evangelistic meetings, his administrative duties at the University, his youth conferences in America and abroad, Dr. Jones never seemed able to find time to start working on the novel until he was laid up with a bout of pleurisy.

During the two months which he spent in bed, Dr. Jones completed the first draft of the novel. He wrote and re-wrote, and had the final manuscript in the hands of the publisher six months later.

When the novel was thansferred to the screen by Unusual Films, Dr. Jones made enough time in his busy schedule to play the part of Pontius Pilate and to design approximately one hundred costumes for the lead roles.

SCIENCE SEEKS IMPROVED PRACTICES IN DAIRYING

The future of the dairyman is being charted, in part, in the laboratories of the scientist.

And this was never more clearly pointed up, reports Dr. G. C. Graf, head of the dairy science department at VPI, than at the recent American Dairy Science Association meeting at the University of Illinois.

Dr. Graf returned with a few highlights of the dairy findings presented, which he thinks will be of interest to Virginia milk producers.

The VPI dairy science department reported on a study which showed that the minimum protein requirements of calves from birth to 8 to 12 weeks of age are around 20 per cent. Milk and milk replacements contain around 24 per cent protein. Protein is one of the more expensive ingredients in a ration, and if calves need less than the 24 per cent, the use of a 20 to 21 per cent protein diet should result in sizeable savings, Dr. Graf said.

Work reported from the University of Illinois showed that the digestibility of milk fat by young calves was very high in milks varying from 3 to 9 per cent fat. The incidence of scouring, however, was highest for the 9 per cent fat milk.

Corn silage as the only roughage for dairy calves up to four months old was tested at North Carolina State College. Scientists there found that calves fed corn silage up to four months of age made gains comparable to those fed good quality hay and similar amounts of milk and starter.

Cornell University presented a paper concerning the differences among individual cows in their consumption of roughages and to what extent the differences depend on the cow's production and weight. The fact that cows of the same size and production will use forages at different rates was brought out rather forcefully in this study. Hay consumed per day per cow varied from 15 to 42 pounds and silage varied from $3 to 130 pounds. Cows that eat large or small amounts of roughages will keep their trends even when different roughages are fed. For instance, a cow that eats a lot of alfalfa hay will eat a lot of other kinds of hay also.

Silage proved superior to hay as a source of roughage in the tests. The cows on silage produced 100 pounds of milk per 54 pounds of total digestible nutrients (TDN) consumed from silage, compared to 60 pounds of TDN consumed from hay.

The scientists also concluded that the low - producing cows were least efficient in their use of feed, and the highest producers were most efficient. Until there is some practical way to determine efficiency on the farm, selection for high production should also result in improvement in efficiency in use of feed, Dr. Graf says. The high-producing cow is still queen of the barnyard.

Another item of interest wa s a demonstration of an automatic feeding unit being developed by the University of Illinois. Recent developments in automatic grinding, mixing and delivery of concentrates will be studied with metering, and delivering of roughage and mixing concentrates with chopped roughage and feed to cows in groups. Thus a large herd of milking cows would be divided into several groups according to level of milk production. The ratio of hay and concentrates in a mixture would be adjusted so that the high-producing groups would receive a mixture higher in concentrates and lower in roughage than a group of low-producing cows.

No grain would be fed in the milking parlor. By automatic adjustments, each group of cows would receive an allotment of the special mixture of hay and grain. All feeding would thus be done automatically twice daily and in bunks provided with conveyors. Almost all handling of feed by hand would be eliminated. This will be an interesting development to watch, Dr. Graf believes.

How Times Change!

It wasn't too long ago that kids walked—or, if they were lucky, rode a bike—to school each day. Some of our parents even rode horseback to school.

Those days, the distance most children had to cover was at least a mile, often more—and regardless of the weather.

Those days are gone forever. Many still walk to school, but increasing numbers drive.

The problem of schools in bygone days to get enough racks for students' bicycles. Today, high schools often must build parking lots to hold the mass of motor vehicles their students arrive in.

If schools don't construct parking lots, students have to leave their cars around the school building — thereby creating a traffic hazard for motorists and pedestrians.

The motor vehicle, then, can be quite a headache to schools.

Nearly six million teenagers — many of them students — drive cars. They make up about 1 out of 14 of the nation's 80 million licensed drivers.

A teenage driver is involved in 1 out of 10 fatal auto accidents. Main fault of teens, according to the National Safety Council: a tendency to speed.

"Lots of teenagers drive to school today," the Council said. "And, unfortunately, young people too often get an urge to show off around their friends.

"The result? More accidents involving teenagers."

Solution to the problem?

"One way to bring down the accident toll amoung young drivers is for every student to take driver education," the Council said. It urged adherence to this driving code:

1. Be proud of your driving. Do your part to prove teenagers can be the best drivers on the road.

2. Smooth driving is the mark of a pro. Don't make jackrabbit starts, squealing turns and fast stops.

3. Be courteous at the wheel. Give the other fellow a break.

4. Don't try to get ahead of the other driver, or to even the score if he's inconsiderate.

5. Speed is a killer. Adjust it to road, weather and traffic conditions.

6. Keep both hands on the wheel and your eyes on the road.

7. Obey the law. Stop at stop signs.

8. Keep your car in top condition. Give special attention to tires, the lights and brakes.

9. Don't be a bumper chaser. Keep a safe distance between you and the car ahead.

FEDERAL CENTENNIAL COMMISSION WANTS TO COOPERATE

Washington, D. C.- The National Civil War Centennial Commission's attitude to date points it out as one of the most amenable agencies the Federal Government ever created.

No red tape!
No protocol!
No gobbledegook!

Those things usually associated with bureaus are out — all because the No. 1 purpose of the agency is to draw the nation together in a unified Centennial observance.

Name squabbles, sectional disputes, debated issues, et ceters, will have no part, so far as the National Commission is concerned.

Was it Civil War? War Between the States? War of the Rebellion? Or War of Northern Aggression?

The National Commission won't answer that one — any more than it will tell a state what sort of Centennial program it must have.

In this respect, the sentiments of Major General U. S. Grant, 3rd, chairman, and Karl S. Betts, executive director, are identical.

"I was down at Charleston, S. C., not long ago attending a meeting of the folks in that state interested in the Centennial," Mr. Betts cited in evidence of his feelings in the matter. "They wanted to know if the National Commission had any objection to their calling their organization the South Carolina Confederate Centennial Commission. 'Of course not,' I replied. 'Call it what you like.'

"General Grant feels the same way about it. A state can call its commission what it likes. All we want it to do is cooperate with us and make this undertaking a success, not only in its own area, but all over the nation."

So it will be Confederate Centennial Commission in South Carolina and out in Minnesota, the 33rd state to form such a group, it will be the Civil War and Sioux Uprising Centenial Commission.
